Most of the investors spend and earn money throughout their life by investing in securities Rarely investor s current money income exactly balances with their consumption desires Sometimes investors may have more money than they want to spend and at other times they may want to purchase more than they can afford These imbalances will lead investors either to borrow or to save to maximize the long run benefits from their income Investment is an activity that is undertaken by those who have savings Savings can be defined as the excess of income over expenditure However all savers need not be investors For example an individual who sets aside some money in a box for a birthday present is a saver but cannot be considered an investor On the other hand an individual who opens a savings bank account and deposits some money regularly for a birthday present would be called an investor The motive of savings does not make a saver an investor However expectations distinguish the investor from a saver The saver who puts aside money in a box does not expect excess returns from the savings However the saver who opens a savings bank account expects a return from the bank and hence is differentiated as an investor The expectation of return is hence an essential characteristic of investment
