
Jammu & Kashmir in legal perspective

Whereas certain emotional, sentimental, cultural, ethnic and religious dimensions can be argued, this paper aims to examine the issue of the princely State of Jammu & Kashmir from a purely legal perspective.

The princely State of Jammu & Kashmir, created in 1846 under the Treaty of Amritsar signed between the East India Company and Maharaja Gulab Singh, remains divided till date. The Maharaja became the founder of the Royal Dogra Dynasty and the first king of the princely State of Jammu & Kashmir by paying 7.5 million of Nanak Shahi rupees (the ruling currency of the Sikh Empire) to the British Government and bought Kashmir Valley, Ladakh Wizarat (comprising of Baltistan, Kargil and Leh) and added it to Jammu which was already under his rule. Gilgit Wizarat (comprising of Gilgit and Pamiri areas) were conquered later in the war against Sikh rule led by Dogra Generals.

Historical Background - Partition & Standstill Agreement

India gained independence in 1947 from the British and the same year Pakistan came into existence. 562 princely states existed in British India before the partition, which were not completely and formally part of British India; its rulers were allowed to govern internal matters like law and order, health, education and economic development. These princely states enjoyed internal autonomy, while by treaty, the British had a control over their Foreign Policy and International Relations. During partition, the State of Jammu & Kashmir was ruled by Maharaja Hari Singh under the paramountcy of British India. The British Viceroy offered individual Kings of princely states the right to accede either to India or Pakistan by executing an Instrument of Accession signed by the Ruler and accepted by the Governor-General of the Dominion. The decision to accede to either Dominions was an exclusive right of the ruler.

The State of Jammu & Kashmir, which was contiguous to both India, and newly formed Pakistan, initially decided to remain independent. It offered to sign Standstill Agreements with both the Dominions. Pakistan immediately signed the Standstill Agreement while India asked for further discussions on its contents. The draft of the Standstill Agreement was formulated on 3 June 1947, by the political department of the British Indian Government and stated that all the administrative arrangements that existed between the British Crown and the princely state would continue unaltered between the signatory dominions (India and Pakistan) and the State, until new arrangements were made.
