LAB 4: PROTEIN CHEMISTRY aka FUN WITH MILK & EGGS!

Purpose:

The purpose of this experiment is to demonstrate the effect of pH and temperature on the structure of proteins. Also to introduce the concept of denaturing proteins.

Background

Most people think of milk as a liquid. Yes, it is a liquid, but milk is really a mixture of fat and protein molecules in a watery solution.

As we discussed in class, proteins are large organic molecules that are built as a chain (or polymer) of amino acids. The behavior and function of the protein is caused by the specific amino acids that are linked together in the chain. These amino acids react with each other and cause the protein chain to twist and fold up into a large 3-D shape, forming a globular protein.

The "R" groups (or side groups) of each amino acid can be either hydrophobic (water-fearing) or hydrophilic (water-loving). When a section of the protein is made of hydrophobic amino acids, it will cause that part of the protein to try to stay away from water. When a section of the protein is made of hydrophilic amino acids, it will cause that part of the protein to try to stay in water.

The protein molecules in milk, called caseins, are very hydrophobic. They try to get away from the watery liquid of the milk, so they fold in on themselves a lot to hide from the water. This folding makes the milk protein molecules into globules in the milk. You can't see them because even though they are large molecules, molecules are still too small to see with the human eye.

Because pH (the acidity of a liquid) and high temperature both disrupt chemical bonds, they can affect how a molecule forms or how it behaves. This is especially true for proteins, since how they are shaped directly controls how well they function. When a protein loses its 3-D shape and unravels back into a long chain, it is called "denaturing."

We will investigate these concepts and effects in this lab.
