Symbiosis of Buddhism with Brahmanism/Hinduism in South Asia and of Buddhism with "local Cults" in Tibet and the Himalayan Region David Seyfort Ruegg, 2008

This book is concerned with the complex and indeed difficult question of the relationship between Buddhism and Brahmanism Hinduism Vedism Shivaism Vishnuism etc in India and between Buddhism and local religious cults in Tibet and certain other parts of the Buddhist world including Japan Although they are clearly not identical twins brought forth by the Indian religious soil Buddhism and Brahmanism Hinduism are closely related siblings Thus questions arise concerning the function and significance of the so called Hindu gods and godlings as they appear in substantial parts of the Buddhist tradition as well as the traditional local divinities in other Buddhist lands In this connection borrowing and syncretism have often been referred to by writers on the subject But in fact these religious interrelationships appear to be considerably more complicated and interesting than this in much of Buddhist thought they possess both salvific soteriological and gnoseological implications The concept of symbiosis seems relevant here as it expresses these special interrelationships more adequately In addition other concepts both etic and emic are considered in this context In Buddhist thought the structurally opposed yet complementary emic concepts of the mundane or worldly and the supramundane or transmundane have often defined the religious relationship under discussion Therefore in this volume this pair of categories is explored the laukika and the lokotrara or the jig rten pa and the jig rten las das pas as they are respectively referred to in the traditions of India and Tibet drawing on a number of Indian and Tibetan sources Gedruckt mit Unterstützung des Fonds zur Förderung der wissenschaftlichen Forschung
