

DNA Technology and Genomics

I. General outlines of genetic engineering

- A. DNA cleavage
- B. Production of recombinant DNA
- C. Cloning of the recombinant DNA
- D. Screening clones

II. Manipulating DNA: DNA cleavage and Production of Recombinant DNA

A. restriction enzymes: molecular scissors with a twist

1. restriction-enzymes, also called restriction endonucleases, are enzymes that cut DNA molecules in specific places
2. restriction enzymes vary considerably
  - hundreds of different kinds of restriction enzymes are known (recognizing different DNA sequences)
  - recognized sequence length varies (most common are "4-base cutters" and "6-base cutters")
  - placement of cut varies; some leave "sticky-ends", others "blunt ends"
  - most recognized sequences are palindromic
    - the sequence on one strand matches that of the complementary strand read in the opposite direction
    - thus 5'-ACGGCT-3' would have a complementary strand 3'-CGGCA-5' or reading from 5' to 3', 5'-ACGGCT-3'
3. restriction enzymes are mostly from bacteria, and their natural role is to destroy DNA from invading viruses

B. making recombinant DNA

1. restriction enzymes are used to cut up DNA of interest and a "vector" into which you want to place the DNA, making restriction fragments
2. particularly when sticky ends are involved, the target DNA restriction fragment can form basepairs with the vector
3. DNA ligase is then used to join the DNA strand back bones

III. Cloning of recombinant DNA: using vectors

A. cloning is the process of making many genetically identical cells from cell-containing recombinant DNA

1. the gene piece introduced in the recombinant DNA is said to be the DNA that is cloned
2. recombinant DNA is introduced to cells by a vector; the vector is usually maintained in the altered cell line

B. a vector is a means of delivering recombinant DNA to an organism

1. vectors must have a way of getting into the host organism (transformation)
2. vectors must have some way of being propagated
  - some types of vectors remain free but are copied and distributed in cell division
