Journal of Traumatic Stress, 2008, Vol. 21, No. 1, 1-10

Objective: Kin remembrance of trauma (KRT) is a form of vicarious trauma that occurs when individuals are exposed to traumatic events through the stories of others. The present study examined the prevalence and consequences of KRT in a sample of 100 college students. Method: Participants completed a questionnaire assessing their exposure to KRT, their symptoms of posttraumatic stress disorder (PTSD), and their coping strategies. Results: The results indicated that a significant number of participants reported exposure to KRT. Furthermore, exposure to KRT was associated with increased symptoms of PTSD and decreased coping strategies. Conclusions: The findings suggest that KRT is a significant form of trauma that can have negative consequences for individuals. Further research is needed to explore the mechanisms underlying KRT and to develop interventions to reduce its impact.
