Immigration

New Immigrants from Europe

Immigrants from Europe, including Italy, Ireland, and Germany, had been coming to the United States since the 1840s. In the 1880s, a new wave of immigrants came from southern and eastern Europe.

Ellis Island and Angel Island

In 1890, the federal government set up Ellis Island in New York Harbor as an immigration station. It was the main entry point for immigrants from Europe. Angel Island, in San Francisco Bay, was used for immigrants from Asia.

Immigration Act of 1924

The Immigration Act of 1924 set a quota for the number of immigrants from each country. It also established the National Origins Formula, which determined the number of immigrants from each country based on the percentage of that country's population in the United States in 1890.

During the 1920s, the number of immigrants to the United States declined. The quota system was the main reason for this. The National Origins Formula also limited the number of immigrants from each country.

Immigrants arriving at Ellis Island in New York Harbor. Many immigrants were from southern and eastern Europe.

The New Immigrants

The new immigrants came from southern and eastern Europe. They were mostly Catholic and Jewish. They were mostly unskilled workers. They came to the United States to find work and a better life. They were mostly from Italy, Ireland, and Poland.

The new immigrants faced many challenges. They often spoke a different language and had different customs. They often had to work in difficult conditions. They often lived in crowded tenement houses. They often faced discrimination.

Despite these challenges, the new immigrants made a significant contribution to the United States. They brought with them new skills, new ideas, and new energy. They helped to build the United States into a great nation.
