

CHAPTER 19 PARTNERSHIPS: FORMATION AND OPERATION

Chapter Outline

1. Business organizations that are formed legally as partnerships, although they are not always so called in conversation, are governed throughout the country, regardless of the legal tradition, upon partnership principles.
 - a. Advantages of the partnership form include ease of creation and the absence of the double taxation often inherent in the creation of a corporation and its subsequent distribution of income.
 - b. Partnership taxation tends to be simpler and better integrated with other corporate organizations, possibly because of the inherent family-like relationship with general partners.
 - c. Partnership legal forms have been created over the years to combine the benefits of corporations and partnerships with an S corporation, limited liability partnership, and limited liability companies.
2. Partnership accounting and the capital account
 - a. The historical system of partnership accounting based on the capital account method is now obsolete.
 - b. The trend in accounting for these related matters is the creation of partnership agreements which incorporate procedures for asset distribution, withdrawal, admission of a new partner, retirement of a partner, etc.
 - c. The more complex needs of the partners in the business should be reflected in the capital account. A partner's equity account should be composed of only one item, such as a particular amount of an investment that may:
 1. be the basis for the partner's profit and loss account and interest. The equity account should be first divided to establish the percentage of the total investment being used to determine.
 2. be the general method for amount being distributed and the corresponding percentage of the total capital interest are used to calculate the value of the business and the percentage of goodwill or special assets previously assumed to be brought in.
3. Partnership income allocation
 - a. At the end of each fiscal period, the income and interest accounts must be closed and with the resulting income figure being assigned to the individual capital accounts.
 - b. The method of allocating income to the capital accounts should be consistent with the nature of partnership.
