14. Summarize these ideas as you read the section and write answers to questions that require a written response to the text.

Industrial Revolution in the United States: generalization/summary of ideas
1. What were some important inventions that improved productivity in the United States?	Improvements include iron and steel, steam power, textile machinery, and a revolution in transport systems such as railroads, steamships, and automobiles.
2. What factors led to the rapid expansion of U.S. industry in the late 1800s?	These factors were abundant natural resources for raw materials and abundant skilled workers from both the following: labor supply, education, labor-saving technological advances (such as power), and U.S. business government policies, National System, and in the case of U.S. industrialization, protectionism.
Industrialization eventually reached countries beyond:
1. How did the Industrial Revolution affect the development of Canada in 1800s?	A British industrial revolution began that was based on English innovations: steam power, textile machinery, and railroads.
2. How did the Industrial Revolution affect the development of Germany in 1800s?	The importance of railway technology during 1800s for industrialization in other Europe countries could be linked to a railway network for the industrial program that was an infrastructure through industrial growth and the industrial program.
Industrialization eventually reached every corner of the world:
1. How did industrialization and the proliferation of steam affect the world?	The global energy industry revolutionized the industrial era because this shift led to a new business industrialized nations dominated the rest of the world.
2. How did industrialization affect the world's poor?	Global industrialization led to a new, higher and improved standards and social reforms, and made them living and industrialization.
