Abstract: This paper presents a review of the most popular approaches for decision tree induction. We present the basic concepts of decision trees, the main learning algorithms, and the various ways to deal with the issue of pruning a decision tree from a learning data. This paper presents an updated survey of decision methods for constructing decision tree classifiers in a supervised manner. The paper suggests a unified approach towards the processing of both categorical and numerical values splitting criteria and pruning with entropy.

2. Decision Trees

A decision tree is a structure representing an inductive generalization of the target space. The structure uses conditions of nodes that form a rooted tree, starting at a directed root with a node called "root" that has two outgoing edges. All other nodes have exactly two incoming edges. A node with outgoing edges is called an internal or test node. All other nodes are called leaves. Nodes between an internal or decision node(s), and a leaf node(s) are called nodes of the internal space. Each test node splits the space according to a certain attribute function of the target attribute values. The test condition used must be:
