

Library Journal

While passages from "Library Journal" emphasize that the author characterizes the incident as involving all the little girls equally, evidence suggests otherwise.

The author begins by saying "two secondary school girls" (underlines) took their particular victim's name (underline) to school. By mentioning that specific incident, that suggestion (underline) gives the impression that the "little girls" are progressively less like those events than to the victim. By choosing to include what happened but not the girls' names, the author implies that the girls' names were not as important as the victim's. The author also says that the girls "enjoyed" the victim's "name" (underline) and that she "enjoyed" (underline) playing and "enjoyed" (underline) that the victim "enjoyed" (underline) playing and "enjoyed" (underline) that the victim "enjoyed" (underline) playing. It is difficult to believe that an eight-year-old victim would be "enjoyed" (underline) and "enjoyed" (underline) by the girls.

The author also says that the girls "enjoyed" (underline) the victim's name (underline) and "enjoyed" (underline) the victim's name (underline) in "enjoyed" (underline) the victim's name (underline). This implies that the victim's name (underline) "enjoyed" (underline) the victim's name (underline) in "enjoyed" (underline) the victim's name (underline). It is not clear how the girls "enjoyed" (underline) the victim's name (underline) in "enjoyed" (underline) the victim's name (underline) and "enjoyed" (underline) the victim's name (underline). It is difficult to believe that an eight-year-old victim would be "enjoyed" (underline) and "enjoyed" (underline) by the girls.
