Abstract – The most of the equipments being used in IT industries, commercial and residential applications are internally working on the DC voltage. So either internal to the equipment or externally they need tonderge conversion from AC to DC for their functioning and operation. Depending on the requirement it consists of Single or Three Phase controlled or uncontrolled rectifier. The simple rectification technique leads to degradation in the quality of the current drawn in terms of Harmonics, wave form Distortion, Power Factor (PF) and affect the power distribution system. The increasing demand of these devices, the line current harmonics and PF pose a major problem by degrading the power quality of the system thus affecting the performance of the other devices also. Hence there is a need to enhance quality of power drawn by these equipments.

This paper propose the front end rectification technique for three phase supply using switching mode active control to enhance these quality factors. The technique is simulated in the MATLAB Simulink environment and results are shown. It also focuses the approach of Pre-regulator integrated circuits towards the power factor correction.

Keywords—Active Power Factor Correction (APFC), Current Loop, Voltage Loop, Harmonic Current.

I. INTRODUCTION

The power supplies in most of the equipments are to convert mains power to the desired level of power that is needed for their proper functioning. This conversion leads to rectification and filtering of input mains power. Then it is scaled down using DC-DC converters as shown in Fig. 1.

As shown in the Fig.2, the current flows for the short duration where the capacitor voltage reaches to peak of input voltage. Due to this short pulses the RMS value of current increases and average value decreases, which adds line losses and power quality issues in the system.

Power factor correction may lead to have benefits like; reduction in distribution cost, more power can be drawn at the same current rating from the line. Presently it is mandatory requirement in many countries for the equipment to comply the standards led by the government.
