Assessment of Morphosyntactic Development of Preschool Children with Hearing Loss Using the Clinical Evaluation of Language Fundamentals-preschool Second Edition Angela Anderson, 2014 It is recommended that children with HL are assessed using standardized assessments normed on hearing peers Houston Joint Commission on Infant Hearing JCIH 2007 However as these assessments are more commonly administered to children with HL there is reason to further investigate the sensitivity of these assessments particularly in their ability to identify weaknesses specific to HL The CELF Preschool 2 Clinical Evaluation of Language Fundamentals 0 3 Preschool Wiig Secord 2 describe findings from an item analysis that show children with HL have ongoing challenges with morphosyntactic development and 3 discuss implications for educational providers i e speech language pathologists deaf educators for interpretation of assessment results and intervention strategies The results indicated that compared to standardized norms children with HL are performing within the average range on the CELF An itemized analysis of subtests of the CELF revealed a pattern of errors were made as a collective group These errors involved the following morphemes a using the phoneme s plurals possessives verb tense third person singular b regular past tense 0 3ed c irregular past tense and d uncontractible copula 0 be0 The results suggest there may be other factors beyond language abilities affecting the performance of children with HL and a standardized test score overall may not reflect these deficits These findings merit further investigation into the frequency of sound factors that may be preventing acquisition of morphosyntactic parts of language in this population ScoreEZ David (Boe) VanDyke, Weber State University.
