

CHAPTER X SENTENCE

1. Sentence /clause interface

In the pyramid of syntactic ranks, the structural unit of sentence occupies the utmost position. Its hierarchic supremacy implies that the sentence is realized by/made up of clause/s and that it is a structural unit capable of serving an independent communicative goal<sup>1</sup>. Sentence is the rank whereby the valency-based grammatical abstractions realized on the level of clauses are used as units of actual communication. At the sentence rank the arrangement of clause elements is exposed to the principles governing the distribution of communicative dynamism (FSP, see Chapter XXX), and various pragmatic considerations involved in speakers' responses to the extralinguistic factors.<sup>2</sup>

Sentence may be realized by one or more clauses, and it is delimited by intonation both externally as well as by special intonation arrangement of its internal components. In the English linguistics the term sentence is used to cover both single-clause as well as non-single clause sentences. In Slovak grammars, the two of the types are referred to as jednoduchá veta and súvetie, respectively. The non-single clause sentences may be composed of 2 clauses (which is considered to be the base type), or more than 2 clauses, sometimes also referred to as multiple sentences. The Slovak terminological counterparts are jednoduché súvetie for the former and zložené súvetie for the latter. The English/Slovak terminological discrepancies are summarized in the following chart, along with suggested translation solutions:

<sup>1</sup> Mathesius Mathesius – (1975, p. 79 A functional Analysis of Present-Day English on a General Linguistic Basis, Praha: Academia: [sentence] the basic element of the communicative process (of the process in which the naming units are brought into mutual relations)... The sentence is an elementary communicative unit through which the speaker reacts to some reality or several items of the reality in a manner that appears to be formally customary and subjectively complete.
