

The New Frontier

As we grow accustomed to the long-term problems being brought by energy depletion, we should not lose sight of the following:

The first 30 years of the 21st century:

Problem	Consequences	Policy Options
Population Growth	Increased demand for energy, water, and food; increased environmental stress; increased competition for resources.	Control population growth; improve energy efficiency; conserve water; improve food production.
Energy Shortage	Increased energy prices; reduced economic growth; increased environmental damage; increased social and political tensions.	Develop alternative energy sources; improve energy efficiency; conserve energy; improve energy distribution.
Water Shortage	Increased water prices; reduced agricultural production; increased environmental damage; increased social and political tensions.	Conserve water; improve water efficiency; develop alternative water sources; improve water distribution.

The first 30 years of the 21st century:

Problem	Consequences	Policy Options
Climate Change	Increased global temperatures; increased sea level rise; increased extreme weather events; increased environmental damage.	Reduce greenhouse gas emissions; improve energy efficiency; conserve energy; improve energy distribution.
