

CHAPTER II LITERATURE REVIEW AND CONCEPTUAL FRAMEWORK

A. Stylistics as the Combination of Linguistic and Literary Analysis

In analyzing literature, linguistic analysis cannot be abandoned. It is because both complement each other. As the basic requirement in understanding literature, the first step is to know the language used as the medium of the literary works. On the other hand, in learning or analyzing language, people should consider literature as a way of how language is used. Furthermore, Leech (1981: 1) asserts that literature cannot be examined in any depth apart from language, and vice versa.

Stylistics is the name of a field of a study proposed to explore language use in literary works. It is said as the combination of linguistic and literary analysis. The statement implies that stylistics coheres the linguistic and literary analysis in analyzing a literary work. It comes from the assumption that those two analyses are strongly related and complemented to one another. Specifically, as the meeting-ground of those two related fields, stylistics studies how language is used in literary works. It is the branch of general linguistics that focuses on style, particularly in works of literature. It investigates how a writer or speaker deploys the phenomenon of language to communicate.

As an exercise in describing what use is made of language in literary works, stylistics has two main goals: to explain the relation between language and artistic function, and to discover the author's works of doubtful attribution (Leech,
