Abstract

Background: Homeless people are at high risk of HIV and tuberculosis (TB) infection due to living in poor sanitary conditions and practicing high-risk behavior. The aim of this study is to assess the knowledge, attitude, and practice (KAP) of homeless people in Tehran regarding TB and HIV.

Methods: Using a convenience sampling, we performed a cross-sectional study on homeless people in Tehran from June to August 2012. Participants aged 18-60 years having at least 30 days of homelessness in the preceding months to the study period were included. All required data were collected through face-to-face interviews conducted using a researcher-designed questionnaire. Each score in KAP of TB and HIV was separately divided by the maximum score and multiplied by 100 to attain percentage scores. The mean scores were compared using analysis of variance (ANOVA) and student's t test. A Tukey test was used for post-hoc analysis and two-by-two comparisons.

Results: In this study, 593 participants consisting of 543 men and 50 women were included. The mean age of the participants was 41.74 ± 0.45 years. Moreover, the total mean score of KAP toward HIV was 79.24 (95% CI: 77.36, 81.12), 57.13 (95% CI: 55.12, 59.14), and 21.14 (95% CI: 18.35, 23.93), respectively. The total mean score of knowledge and practice regarding TB was 62.04 (95% CI: 59.94, 64.14) and 42.57 (95% CI: 40.36, 44.78), respectively.

Conclusions: Although a relatively acceptable knowledge was detected in this high-risk population, practices regarding TB and HIV showed some weaknesses. Developing special programs to improve the healthy behavior of this population is highly recommended.

Key Messages

Implications for policy makers

- Educational and counseling programs in prisons, harm reduction centers, and shelters can help governments prevent high-risk behaviors in homeless people.
- A concerted national strategy is needed to decrease the size of the homeless population.

Implications for the public

Homeless people are more vulnerable to infectious diseases due to their poor nutrition, high-risk behavior, and low knowledge. The relation between homeless people and the general population is documented, especially in the area of HIV. These connections may result in transmission of diseases such as HIV to low-risk populations. Understanding the baseline status of knowledge, attitude, and practice (KAP) in homeless people can help the policymakers to find the gaps and develop specific programs accordingly.

Introduction

The acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS) has become a pandemic threat to the world population.¹ After the introduction of the HIV in 1983,² the disease was first reported in Iran (a boy with hemophilia) in 1986. Based on national reports, a total of 34846 HIV-infected people have been identified in Iran until December 2016. However, according to the estimates, there are over 76000 people living with HIV in Iran. The most predominant method of HIV transmission in Iran is injection drug use, with sexual contact has been recently acknowledged as an important mode of transmission. Educational programs have been introduced as an important tool to HIV prevention.³ HIV is the most significant known risk factor for activation of latent tuberculosis infection (LTBI). The risk of active tuberculosis (TB) for people with both LTBI and HIV reaches
