CHAPTER 2 | Trade-offs, Comparative Advantage, and the Market System

SOLUTIONS TO END-OF-CHAPTER EXERCISES

Review Questions

2.1

Production Possibilities Frontiers and Opportunity Costs (pages 30–36)

Learning Objective: Use a production possibilities frontier to analyze opportunity costs and trade-offs.

- 1.1 The production possibilities frontier (PPF) is a curve showing all the attainable combinations of two products that may be produced with available resources and existing technology. Combinations of goods that are on the frontier are efficient because all available resources are being fully utilized, and the fewest possible resources are being used to produce a given amount of output. Points inside the production possibilities frontier are inefficient, because the maximum output is not being obtained from the available resources. A production possibilities frontier will shift outward (to the right) if more resources become available for making the products or if technology improves so that firms can produce more output with the same amount of inputs.
- 1.2 Increasing marginal opportunity costs means that as more and more of a product is made, the opportunity cost of making each additional unit rises. It occurs because the first units of a good are made with the resources that are best suited for making it, but as more and more of the product is made, resources must be used that are better suited for producing something else. Increasing marginal opportunity costs implies that the production possibilities frontier is bowed out—that its slope gets steeper and steeper as you move down the production possibilities frontier.

Comparative Advantage and Trade (pages 36–41)

Learning Objective: Understand comparative advantage and explain how it is the basis for trade.
