1. Introduction

This study was on the challenges facing micro and small enterprises (MSEs) in inventory management. Inventory is an essential diagnostic instrument of MSEs and their challenges. Inventory, which includes both their own and customers' inventory, is a key business asset. These entrepreneurs are the backbone of employment, the source of social capital formation, the source of jobs, the site of the business activities and source of tax revenue (2007). According to Kenya Institute of Development Studies (KIDS), a micro-enterprise is a type of small business with less than 7 employees and a total capital of less than US$ 10,000. In addition, medium enterprise refers to the business enterprise with 8-49 employees and small enterprises refer to those business enterprise with less than 7 employees. Furthermore, the United States adopted micro and small enterprises that the developing countries took a long time in attaining overall success for the enterprises. Generally MSEs represent the smallest business units in the developing nations.

In Kenya, although micro and small enterprises existed before their general recognition in the 1990s through Kenya Small Trade and the Industrial Development Fund (KIDIFID) and various industrial projects (KIDIP). The projects encouraged identification and privatization of the country's economy; consequently, micro and small enterprises were created. Entrepreneurs who started their business in Africa and middle income nations (KIDIP, 2007; Prasad, 2007; KIDIP, 2007). The 1997 Kenya National Census and Small Enterprises Research Survey established that MSEs contributed about 88.0% of the country's Gross Domestic Product (GDP) and 74.2% of jobs in the MSE sector. Kenya KIDIP defined micro, small and medium enterprises (MSEs) as those to say business in the private sector which employ not more than 10 employees.

Micro, Small and Medium Enterprises Act (MSME), 2007 defines two categories of MSEs as manufacturing and production MSEs. The number of employees and the annual sales criteria. These enterprises with an annual sales less than US$ 10,000 and less than 10 employees and consisting of can be classified as micro and small enterprises. Although a national census instrument of MSEs has not been carried, these enterprises have improved (KIDIP, 2007; KIDIP and Change, 2007; KIDIP, 2007), and as a consequence, MSEs have increased and become

- a) Small business enterprise with 10 employees
- b) Small business enterprise with 10 employees or less
- c) Small business enterprise with 10 employees or less
- d) Small business enterprise with 10 employees or less
- e) Small business enterprise with 10 employees or less

It is worth noting that since the formation of Industrial Development Fund, commonly known as IDIFID, and the Kenya Small Trade, the government has attempted to support MSEs through various projects of support such as Industrial Development Fund, Small Trade, Finance, Management and Training Fund, Small Trade, Small and Medium Enterprises Fund, Small Trade and Finance, 2007). However, since then, MSEs are regarded as essential players in the economy and contribute to the GDP and overall success. According to Kenya Institute of Development Studies (KIDIP), MSEs contributed 88.0% of jobs and accounted for 88% of the Gross Domestic Product (GDP). The
