

TYPES OF Cloud Computing

Cloud computing is providing developers and IT departments with the ability to focus on what matters most and what differentiated work like procurement, maintenance, and capacity planning.

Understanding the differences between Infrastructure as a Service, Platform as a Service, and Software as a Service, as well as what deployment strategies you can use, can help developers to decide what set of services is suitable for their needs.

Cloud Computing Models

Infrastructure as a Service (IaaS)

Infrastructure as a Service, contains the basic building blocks for cloud IT.

It provides you with the highest level of management control over your resources, and it is the most similar to existing IT resources that many developers are familiar with today. Infrastructure as a Service typically provides access to networking features, computers, and data storage space.

Software as a Service (SaaS)

Software as a Service provides a completed product, run and managed by the service provider.

With a SaaS offering, businesses don't have to worry about how they're going to maintain the service or how they're going to manage the underlying infrastructure. A typical example of a SaaS application is web-based email, where you can send and receive email without managing additional features for the email product or maintaining the servers and operating systems on which the email program is running.

Platform as a Service (PaaS)

Platforms as a Service remove the need for organizations to manage the underlying infrastructure and allow them to focus on the development and management of their applications.

PaaS helps businesses be more efficient as they don't need to worry about resource procurement, capacity planning, software maintenance, patching, or any other up-front or ongoing heavy lifting involved in running their application.

Cloud Computing Deployment Models

☐ CLOUD

A cloud-based application is fully deployed and run in the cloud. Applications in the cloud have either been created or migrated from the existing infrastructure. Cloud-based applications can be built on low-level infrastructure or use higher-level services that provide abstraction from core infrastructure management, architecting, and scaling requirements.

☐ HYBRID

A hybrid deployment is a way to connect infrastructure and applications between cloud-based resources and existing resources outside the cloud. The most common method of hybrid deployment is between the cloud and existing on-premises infrastructure to extend and grow an organization's infrastructure into the cloud while connecting cloud resources to the internal system.

☐ ON-PREMISES

Deploying resources on-premises, using virtualization and resource management tools, is sometimes called "private cloud." It does not provide many benefits of cloud computing, but organizations choose this approach because it provides dedicated resources. In most cases, this deployment model is the same as legacy IT infrastructure, while it uses application management and virtualization technologies to try and increase resource utilization.
