The Return of Financial Repression Carmen M. Reinhart (Economiste), 2012 Government Revue from Financial Repression Alberto Giovannini, Martha de Melo, 1991 Government revenue from financial repression Alberto Giovannini, 1991 Essays on Financial Repression Rangan Gupta, 2005 Financial Repression and Economic Growth Nouriel Roubini, 1991 We survey the literatures that study the relation between the trade regime and growth and financial development financial repression and growth We analyze the relation between the trade regime the degree of financial development and the growth performance of a large cross section of countries The systematic finding is that there is a negative relation between trade distortions and growth We also present some variables that capture the degree to which the financial sector is distorted We find that financial repression has negative consequences for growth We also find that inflation is negatively related to growth We interpret this relation however as symptomatic rather than causal We show that once we hold constant measures of the trade regime and financial repression the regional dummies for Latin America are no longer significant Thus the poor performance of the Latin American countries over the last few decades is related to the trade and financial policies pursued by their governments
