Abstract: This article provides information for Extension professionals on the correct process of Likert data. The process of Likert data and Likert scale data reports unique data analysis procedures, and as a result, involves unique statistical interpretation. This article discusses the differences between Likert data and Likert scale data and provides general considerations for designing questions to be used during the analysis. Once a researcher understands the difference between Likert data and Likert scale data, the process of appropriate statistical procedures and its options.

Introduction

Over the years, numerous methods have been used to measure attitudes and personality traits (Likert, 1930). The difficulty of measuring attitudes, character, and personality traits led to the procedure for measuring these qualities using a quantitative measure for data analysis purposes. This same principle of qualitative research techniques has inspired some of the scales associated with the attitudes. However, many social scientists still rely on quantitative measures of attitudes, character and personality traits.

In response to the difficulty of measuring attitudes and personality traits, Likert (1930) developed a procedure for measuring attitudinal scales. The original Likert scale used a series of questions with five response alternatives: strongly approve (1), approve (2), undecided (3), disapprove (4), and strongly disapprove (5). He assumed the responses from the series of questions to create an attitudinal measurement scale. His data analysis was based on the responses score from the series of questions that represented the attitudinal scale. He did not analyze individual questions. While Likert used a five-point scale, other variations of his response alternatives are approved, including the addition of the neutral response (Cohen & Gorenflo, 1986).

Likert response alternatives are widely used by Extension professionals. By the time of this article's preparation, at least 12 articles published in the 2011 Journal of Extension had used some form of a Likert response (in 2010, at least 27 articles published in the journal of Extension used the technique. The articles published in 2011 included 4-point Likert alternatives (Barnes & Kelly, 2011; Robinson & Sheppard, 2011); five-point Likert alternatives (Klein, Walters, Cunningham, Calkins, & Nelson, 2011; Stone, 2011; Hines, Muehlen, & Pyles, 2011; Klockarschick, 2011; Kuntz & Nevo, 2011; Sheppard, Barnes, & Hill, 2011); six-point Likert alternatives (Chan, Kwon, & Sallee, 2011; Sheppard & Hill, 2011; Meyer et al., 2011), and a seven-point Likert alternative (Walter, Wright, Walker, & Hess, 2011).

While variations of the Likert response alternatives have become common in Extension research, common usage has also created confusion or misuses. One statistic commonly made in the original analysis of individual questions on an attitudinal scale. Before we discuss the analysis
