

Special Senses - Vision

Normally, sensory information is transmitted as a message-carrying action potential along the body and distributed throughout the brain. When triggered, these messages travel across longways along different pathways within the brain for interpretation. Thus, these specializations of the nervous system allow the body to sense and adjust to changing conditions in the environment very efficiently.

Five basic categories of general sensation that occur across the body are pain, temperature changes, and touch/pressure - vibratory, dullness, numbness. In addition, the senses are specialized to: sight, hearing, equilibrium, taste/smell - vision, hearing, and balance, and olfactory - vision, hearing, and balance.

Eye and Vision

It interprets the reflected light coming from the objects in the environment by the process of vision.

It is the part of the eye that receives the light rays from the objects in the environment and focuses them.

The cornea is the part of the eye that is transparent and allows light to pass through. It is the part of the eye that is curved and helps to focus the light. The lens is the part of the eye that is biconvex and helps to focus the light. The retina is the part of the eye that is the back of the eye and is where the light is focused. The optic nerve is the part of the eye that carries the visual information to the brain.

It is the part of the eye that is the back of the eye and is where the light is focused. The optic nerve is the part of the eye that carries the visual information to the brain.

Cornea - transparent part of the eye

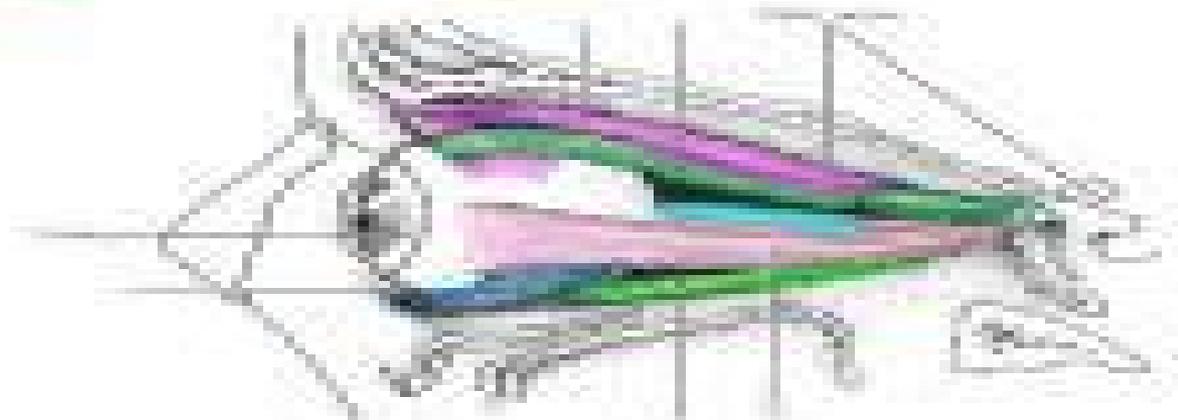

Iris - colored part of the eye

Pupil - opening in the iris
