

Provisions for assessment of existing structures in the second-generation concrete Eurocode

Craig Cicco examines ways in which the second-generation of Eurocode 2 will facilitate the assessment of existing concrete-framed structures.

EN 1992-1-1 (2004) (code of practice) includes additional provisions that enable it to be used for assessment of existing structures. This article outlines some of these provisions, which are likely to be of assistance when using Eurocode 2 to assess concrete-framed structures. These include:

- determining characteristic material properties for assessment
- adjusting design loads or factors where testing is used to determine material properties
- determining values of deterioration
- load lifting force and anchorage lengths of bar ends
- dealing with existing structures' capacity to the current situation
- using gross cross-sections for assessment of their resistance.

Material properties

EN 1992-1-1 (2004) requires characteristic values of material properties to assess the existing structure. Annex E provides guidance for such values to either be taken as the assessment is undertaken or determined using EN 1992-1-1 to determine their characteristic concrete strength from testing. It provides a range of factors to adjust to determine  $f_{ck}$  from  $f_{ctd}$  (taking some provision for duration where testing is not to be carried at the region being assessed). Additional information is provided to the standard to enable characteristic values of steel strength or reinforcement to be determined from testing should steel grades used in the structure not be available from national authorities.

The UK National Annex committee is presently reviewing this factor for determining  $f_{ck}$  from  $f_{ctd}$ . It may require some adjustments to the characteristic values to assess agreement with values obtained from EN 1992-1-1 (2004) and the UK National Annex, taking into account the ability to adjust design factors for partial to Annex A of the new standard. It may also consider different methods of determining  $f_{ck}$  from  $f_{ctd}$  where gross concrete cross-section is the region being assessed, such as using the results of laboratory tests using calibrated compressive cones, along with safety provisions in EN 1992-1-1.

Partial material factors

Annex A of the new standard provides new tables for partial material factors to be applied based on material test results from the structure. This should generally reduce the value of these factors, when a low coefficient of variation of material strength is obtained from testing, which is beneficial for assessed members generally. The standard permits test data available from records to also be used where suitable and appropriate.

Deterioration

Previous generations of Eurocode used a set factor to identify an issue. The spirit of the new standard is that all issues identified with deterioration, but in assessing members for global types of deterioration and their impact. It also clearly provides guidance on when assessment of reinforcement is likely to affect the presence of the bar.

Plain bars

EN 1992-1-1 (2004) requires that steel reinforcement bars include minimum length detailing to ensure anchors. The provisions are based on a new extended-anchorage model of steel bars that was developed during the drafting of the standard (Pillitteri et al.). The provisions also cover the variation of load resulting from variable steel areas.

Previous editions of standard that suggested that conservative values of anchorage lengths could be used using these provisions in certain circumstances. Other established methods of assessing the bond of steel bars are available in the UK, including those listed by National Highway (2004). These may more closely with British provisions in EN
