Safety, Health and Environment Management Systems

1.1 NEED FOR INTEGRATION OF SAFETY, HEALTH AND ENVIRONMENT (S, H & E)

Present-day industries are becoming more and more complex because they have to meet the requirement of increased production rate, high efficiency and optimisation. Huge investments are incurred. Any negligence at any stage from concept stage to design, erection, operation can result into disaster, loss of human lives and huge production losses, etc. Accordingly safety aspects deserve serious attention. Today safety is an integral part of any industry. Even if a single employee neglects safety aspect, it can lead to serious problem for everybody. It is, therefore, essential that foolproof safety systems be designed and incorporated, people trained adequately, checks and counterchecks made to ensure implementation of safety. As losses due to any accident can be surmountable, it is important that top management gets involved and shows full commitment towards implementation of safety. In present context it is not only sufficient to take care of safety but other two interrelated aspects, viz., health (well-being of employees) and environment are also attached equal importance and consideration. All these three elements are interrelated and affect each other. For instance, if health of employees is not given due regard, it may lead to accidents. If industry pollutes the environment around work place, it will ultimately affect health of employees which may ultimately affect production. Each industry has certain obligations towards keeping good environment and also towards health of people. It is only if health and environment are in control that safety in industry can be ensured.

Showing Interrelationship and Interlinking between safety, health and environment.

Safety being a complex mechanism, necessary documentation has to be evolved, checklists prepared and system be designed to ensure implementation of all safe procedures and practices. The safety systems may have to be reviewed from time to time and updated. Necessary audits should be carried out. Safety head should report direct to top management and safety need not be compromised at any cost.

All employees should be made aware of keeping good health. Any conditions which can spoil health of employees should be corrected/eliminated. All employees should be subjected to
