natural selection changes the range of traits in a population - there are 3 ways it can change. Let's look at a moth population that shows

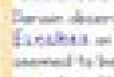

ORIGINAL TOBY POPULATION

Evolution by natural selection

Describe the theory of natural selection and how this theory was first conceived (thought of).

An English naturalist named Charles Darwin went on a voyage around the world. He noticed that animals in similar environments had similar characteristics. For example, in the Galápagos islands, Darwin observed similar but non-identical species of finches on each island. He noticed that their beaks seemed to be adapted to their food source. After some time thinking and the work of other scientists, Darwin developed his theory of natural selection.

Individuals with favorable traits are more likely to survive and reproduce, passing on their characteristics to their offspring. Over time, the population becomes better adapted to its environment.

Individuals with unfavorable traits are less likely to survive and reproduce, leading to their elimination from the population.

An example of natural selection!

A population of light brown moths lived in an area of dark rock. They had a few red butterflies.	One day a hawk came to hunt for the common variation.
The hawk with dark fur was camouflage against the dark rock where they live.	The light brown moths are more likely to get eaten - they are the birds' favorite!
A higher proportion of black moths survived to reproduce, passing on the beneficial trait.	Over time, the population has changed as 10% more of the moths have black fur.

Stabilizing

Stabilizing selection is a type of natural selection that favors the average phenotype and selects against extreme variations. The graph shows a bell curve representing the population distribution.

Gene Flow - an example:

Gene flow is the movement of genes in or out of a population through migration. It can bring new alleles into a population or remove existing ones. The frequency of existing alleles can change.
