Death is a subject that has fascinated many authors for a very long time. Edgar Allan Poe is one of the writers that best depicts stories which uncover mysterious circumstances surrounding death. He is a master storyteller when it comes to the macabre and the bizarre methods of killing victims. He is obsessed with characters who carefully plan their assassinations and cover up their murders. However there is more to his work than blood, gore, and murder.

There is a common denominator in most of his major works. His central character is overwhelmed with guilt, and fear. It is guilt that results from wicked thoughts, and evil desires. In "The Tell-Tale Heart", Edgar Allan Poe shows through the narrator's confession, the internal conflict that rages within him and it is this internal conflict that drives him to prove that there is nothing wrong with him.

The central theme of the story is the internal conflict that is eating up the narrator from within. He was a troubled man and it can be argued that he was bothered by what he was feeling and thinking because it suggested that there is something wrong in him.

This is seen in the opening statements when he said: "True! Neverous, very, very dreadfully nervous I had been and am; but wy will you say that I am mad?" (Poe, 1843, p1). He tries to justify his actions, and show that he is not a bad person. Most importantly, he tries to show that he is not a mad man. In order to prove this, he uses different methods which show he is a sane man. He desperately tries to explain his rationale.

It was the inner conflict that drives the main character to acts of obsession. This is what he said: "You should have seen how wisely I proceeded -- with what caution -- with what foresight, with what dissimulation, I went to work!" (Poe, 1843, p.1). It is this inner conflict that drives him to achieve the perfect murder.

He develops a method to kill the old man using fear. Though he says he is a good man, the diabolical method he invents speaks for itself, showing once more the
