

Chapter 4: Energy and Matter

Energy and Matter

Energy and Matter

Energy and matter are the two fundamental components of the universe. Energy is the ability to do work, and matter is anything that has mass and takes up space.

The first law of thermodynamics states that energy cannot be created or destroyed, only converted from one form to another. This is also known as the conservation of energy.

The second law of thermodynamics states that the total entropy of an isolated system can never decrease over time. Entropy is a measure of the disorder or randomness of a system.

The third law of thermodynamics states that the entropy of a perfect crystal at absolute zero is zero.

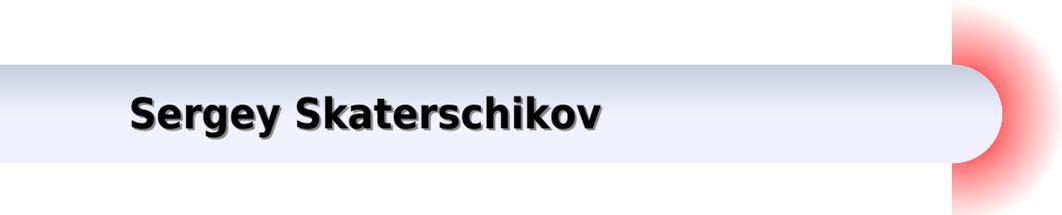

Energy can be stored in matter, and matter can be converted into energy. For example, the energy stored in a battery can be used to power a light bulb, and the energy stored in a nuclear reactor can be used to generate electricity.
