

High Performance Regenerative Receiver Design

There have been several popular Regen projects in recent QST's and ARRL Handbooks. Look at the design process and progress; then build one—or both—of the receivers described.

By Charles Kitchin, N1TEV

Many hams have tried regenerative receivers with mixed results. Some people are quite attached to "regens," while others consider them only suitable for beginner experimentation.

I have spent several years researching this subject and have come away with a great respect for the technical knowledge possessed by the "old-timers" of the 1920s and '30s. Unfortunately, much of this knowledge has been forgotten. Many significant discoveries, such as the "throttle"-capacitor regeneration control are unknown to most modern homebrewers.

This article will show that, if properly designed, a modern regen is quite capable of direct-conversion or superheterodyne-level performance, although it does require greater operator skill. Attention to a few simple details can provide an excellent receiver for ham or general-coverage shortwave use. For beginners and veterans alike, studying, building and using regenerative circuits can add new interest, excitement and fun to the radio hobby.

A Brief History

The regenerative circuit was used in both commercial and ham receivers in the 1920s until the early 1930s. It was the standard ham receiver during this period, and a great deal of experimental work was done to optimize its performance. As the great depression slowly ended, the use of the regen declined, because many people could then afford to buy commercial superheterodyne receivers.

Hams continued to use regens, usually home-brewed, through the rest of the 1930s. Although better components were then available, regens of the 1940s and '50s had been reduced to introductory sets for beginners—with generally poor performance.

By the 1960s and '70s, regenerative circuits had been replaced by the now popular direct-conversion receiver.
