FOREWORD

The material in this chapter is written with regard to typical North American Railroad Concrete Structures and Foundations, and other related structures and facilities.

- Nonbearing Walls
- Typical Road Structures (pavement and bridge supports), and
- Types of Bridge (with up to 100 spans and piers) and spans up to 100 ft.

Additional special provisions for spans higher than those listed above may be added to the Chapter Introduction.

This chapter is presented in 2 sections. Section 8.1 contains a summary of railroad bridge construction being referred to in railroad practice and design, including and highlighting Common Features and Transactions used by railroads. The recommendations provided herein are for design and construction, all items in the case of known, fixed, and correct design and construction practice. These recommendations are intended for general use and might not provide sufficient criteria for unusually demanding conditions. Professional judgement must be exercised when applying the recommendations of this chapter as part of an overall solution to any particular case.

This chapter is published separately, incorporating no items made in the previous code. The first published edition of this chapter should be used, regardless of the type of the existing structure. The purpose of publishing technical recommendations under such an existing structure was to have them built and maintained. It was never intended to require practice outside of the chapter. However, when technical recommendations differ from the recommendations contained in the code published edition of the chapter, the recommendations of the code published edition of the chapter should be used.

Part 8, Road (Type) Concrete Bridges, was added from the revised to 1975 Part 8, Reinforced Concrete Bridges and added from the revised to 1977. Part 11 is described for Main use. Part 12, Concrete Bridge Supports, was added to Chapter 11 in 1984.

¹ The scope of the separate chapters in this volume should be fully understood in relation to recommendations regarding construction practices to be followed. Some recommendations are for design and construction, all items in the case of known, fixed, and correct design and construction practice. These recommendations are intended for general use and might not provide sufficient criteria for unusually demanding conditions. Professional judgement must be exercised when applying the recommendations of this chapter as part of an overall solution to any particular case.
