

Chapter 5: Homeostasis and Transport

Lesson 5.3: Homeostasis

What happens if stability is disrupted? Remove one stone and the whole arch collapses. The same is true for the human body. All the systems work together to maintain stability or homeostasis. Disrupt one system, and the whole body may be affected.

Lesson Objectives

- Identify the process by which body systems are kept within certain limits.
- Explain the role of feedback mechanisms in homeostasis.
- Distinguish negative feedback from positive feedback.
- Identify an example of two organ systems working together to maintain homeostasis.
- Summarize the role of the endocrine system in homeostasis.
- Outline the result of a disturbance in homeostasis of a body system.
- Understand how homeostatic mechanisms maintain homeostasis for all life on Earth.

Vocabulary

- glucoregulation
- negative feedback loop
- osmoregulation
- positive feedback loop
- thermoregulation

Introduction

The human body is made up of trillions of cells that all work together for the maintenance of the entire organism. While cells, tissues, and organs may perform very different functions, all the cells in the body are similar in their metabolic needs. Maintaining a constant internal environment by providing the cells with what they need to survive (oxygen, nutrients, and removal of waste) is necessary for the well-being of individual cells and of the entire body. The many processes by which the body controls its internal environment are collectively called homeostasis. The complementary activity of major body systems maintains homeostasis.

Homeostasis

All of the organs and organ systems of the human body work together like a well-oiled machine. This is because they are closely regulated by the nervous and endocrine systems. The nervous system controls virtually all body activities, and the endocrine system secretes hormones that regulate these activities. Functioning together, the organ systems supply body cells with all the substances they need and eliminate their wastes. They also keep temperature, pH, and other conditions at just the right levels to support life processes.
