Introduction

Concrete walls are usually built in situ. They are cast in place and are subject to the same problems as any other concrete structure. The most common problem is the ingress of water and salts from the ground.

The water and salts can cause a variety of problems, including: corrosion of reinforcement, scaling and delamination of the concrete, and the formation of white crystalline deposits on the surface.

The water and salts can also cause the concrete to become more porous and permeable, which can lead to further water and salt ingress.

Water and salt ingress

Water and salt ingress can occur through a variety of mechanisms, including: capillary action, diffusion, and convection.

Capillary action is the most common mechanism of water and salt ingress. It occurs when water and salts are drawn up the wall by the forces of cohesion and adhesion between the water molecules and the concrete surface.

Diffusion is the movement of water and salts through the concrete pores.
