

1. The first step in the process is to identify the key components of the system. This involves a thorough review of the existing documentation and a consultation with the relevant stakeholders. The goal is to understand the current state of the system and the requirements for the new system.

2. Once the key components are identified, the next step is to define the functional requirements for the new system. This involves a detailed analysis of the business processes and the specific needs of the users. The requirements should be clear, measurable, and achievable.

3. The next step is to design the system architecture. This involves defining the overall structure of the system, including the hardware, software, and network components. The architecture should be scalable, flexible, and secure.

4. The final step is to implement the system. This involves the development, testing, and deployment of the system. It is important to ensure that the system is tested thoroughly before it is put into production.
