EPC CONTRACTS IN THE POWER SECTOR

Introduction

Engineering, procurement and construction (EPC) contracts are the predominant form of contract used in industrial construction made by the private sector in Singapore and complex infrastructure projects<sup>1</sup>. Unlike an EPC contract, construction is split in different components. Facility construction would only take place after the design, planning and financing. Since EPC contracts are commonly used in large infrastructure projects, it is not surprising that following a completed facility, the contractor would deliver the facility for a period of time for a guaranteed rate and in great part to the satisfaction. Failure to comply with any requirements will usually result in the contractor covering necessary facilities.

It is usually to consider EPC contracts suitable for low-risk infrastructure projects given the fact that the contractor bears almost completely all construction risk. In addition, all construction risks (contractual terms and, in a small amount, all construction cost risks) are covered under EPC contracts to certain extent. The greatest risk being transferred is contractual engineering or the contract itself. EPC contracts themselves are usually more complex due to their significant power and/or the early projects and the impact of Amendment 11 which amended terms.

However, because of their flexibility, the value and the contract amounts and trends show that EPC contracts are the primary type of EPC projects. The contract values EPC contracts will increase as the government focus on infrastructure and energy with infrastructure projects in their portfolios<sup>2</sup>.

This paper will only focus on the use of EPC contracts in the power sector. However, the majority of the work done and completed in EPC contracts used in all sectors. There is increasing private power EPC contracts awarded and used to replace the state-owned or public power

Africa By examining competition and regulation in a single framework and viewing this within the southern African experience this volume adds new perspectives to the global competition literature It is an essential reference tool and will be of great interest to policymakers and regulators as well as the rapidly growing ecosystem of legal practitioners and economists engaged in the field
