

An exploratory investigation into factors affecting class attendance in a Hospitality Management Module

Doulette Brask

Abstract

The research investigates various factors that influence student class attendance in a Hospitality Management module. Using survey questionnaires, the research aimed to determine factors that may negatively affect class attendance of first year students. The research was embarked upon to determine reasons for students not attending class as a possible variable for low throughput and high dropout rates. The research findings will indicate which factors affects class attendance the most in a Hospitality Management module. The data was analysed according to biographical information, external factors influencing class attendance, students' motivation, respondents' perceptions and internal factors to the institution. The biographical information does not play a factor in absenteeism. External factors do play a very small factor in non-attendance, what but no a significant role. The research found that motivation, respondents' perceptions and internal factors to the institution do play a role in non-attendance in group of students.

1. Introduction

Attendance is a very controversial concept in Higher education. Students are expected to take accountability and to make choices about attending classes. It has always been seen as an important factor in academic success, but attendance is so much more. Durden & Ellis (1995, p. 343) claims that attendance is in reality a representation of a student's motivation.

Attendance is important for various reasons. Attendance assist student learning in different ways. It brings theory to life, opens the opportunity for discussions, explanation and collaboration on topics. Attendance also contributes to students developing self-management, team work, customer awareness, marketability and problem solving, these aspect are nurtured in class. Students fine-tune and practice communication and literacy skills with application of numeracy and information technology in class, all these aspects enhance a student's employability (Manchester Metropolitan University: Careers & Employability Service, 2012).
