

The Digestive System

What is the digestive system?

The digestive system, or gastrointestinal tract, is a complex of organs in which foods, beverages, and other nutrients are broken down into smaller molecules that can be absorbed into the bloodstream. The process begins in the mouth, where food is chewed and mixed with saliva. The resulting bolus is then swallowed and moves down the esophagus into the stomach. In the stomach, food is further broken down and mixed with gastric juices. The resulting chyme then moves into the small intestine, where most of the digestion and absorption of nutrients occurs. The small intestine is divided into three parts: the duodenum, the jejunum, and the ileum. The large intestine, or colon, is the final part of the digestive system. It is responsible for absorbing water and electrolytes from the remaining indigestible food matter. The waste is then moved to the rectum and expelled from the body through the anus.

Liver, pancreas & gallbladder

The liver, pancreas, and gallbladder are accessory organs of the digestive system. The liver is the largest organ in the body and is responsible for producing bile, which is used to emulsify fats in the small intestine. The pancreas is a gland that produces pancreatic juice, which contains enzymes that help to break down carbohydrates, proteins, and fats. The gallbladder is a small sac that stores bile until it is needed for digestion.

Layers of large intestine

Large intestine

The large intestine is the final part of the digestive system. It is responsible for absorbing water and electrolytes from the remaining indigestible food matter. The large intestine is divided into three parts: the cecum, the colon, and the rectum. The cecum is a large sac that is located at the junction of the small and large intestines. The colon is a long tube that is responsible for absorbing water and electrolytes. The rectum is the final part of the large intestine and is responsible for storing feces until it is ready to be expelled from the body.

Peristaltic action

Peristaltic action is the process by which the digestive system moves food through the system. It is a series of involuntary muscle contractions that push food through the digestive tract. The process begins in the mouth, where food is chewed and mixed with saliva. The resulting bolus is then swallowed and moves down the esophagus into the stomach. In the stomach, food is further broken down and mixed with gastric juices. The resulting chyme then moves into the small intestine, where most of the digestion and absorption of nutrients occurs. The small intestine is divided into three parts: the duodenum, the jejunum, and the ileum. The large intestine, or colon, is the final part of the digestive system. It is responsible for absorbing water and electrolytes from the remaining indigestible food matter. The waste is then moved to the rectum and expelled from the body through the anus.

The mouth & salivary glands

The mouth is the starting point of the digestive system. It is where food is chewed and mixed with saliva. The resulting bolus is then swallowed and moves down the esophagus into the stomach. In the stomach, food is further broken down and mixed with gastric juices. The resulting chyme then moves into the small intestine, where most of the digestion and absorption of nutrients occurs. The small intestine is divided into three parts: the duodenum, the jejunum, and the ileum. The large intestine, or colon, is the final part of the digestive system. It is responsible for absorbing water and electrolytes from the remaining indigestible food matter. The waste is then moved to the rectum and expelled from the body through the anus.

The stomach

The stomach is a muscular organ that is responsible for breaking down food into smaller pieces. It is where most of the digestion of proteins occurs. The stomach is divided into two parts: the fundus and the antrum. The fundus is the upper part of the stomach and is responsible for storing food. The antrum is the lower part of the stomach and is responsible for mixing food with gastric juices. The resulting chyme then moves into the small intestine, where most of the digestion and absorption of nutrients occurs.

Small intestine

The small intestine is the longest part of the digestive system. It is responsible for most of the digestion and absorption of nutrients. The small intestine is divided into three parts: the duodenum, the jejunum, and the ileum. The duodenum is the first part of the small intestine and is responsible for mixing food with gastric juices. The jejunum is the middle part of the small intestine and is responsible for absorbing nutrients. The ileum is the final part of the small intestine and is responsible for absorbing bile salts and vitamin B12.

Absorption

Absorption is the process by which nutrients are taken up by the body. It occurs in the small intestine, where most of the digestion and absorption of nutrients occurs. The small intestine is divided into three parts: the duodenum, the jejunum, and the ileum. The duodenum is the first part of the small intestine and is responsible for mixing food with gastric juices. The jejunum is the middle part of the small intestine and is responsible for absorbing nutrients. The ileum is the final part of the small intestine and is responsible for absorbing bile salts and vitamin B12.
