

Computing Discounts Activity

Context

When purchasing items, it is often not clear how much the total price will be after discounts. For example, suppose a 10% discount is applied to the total price. The discount is applied to the total price, not to the price after the discount. For example, if the total price is $100, the discount is $10, and the total price after the discount is $90. The discount is applied to the total price, not to the price after the discount.

Suppose the total price is $100, and the discount is 10%.

Let T be the total price, D be the discount, and P be the price after the discount.

Discount Percentage = $\frac{\text{Discount}}{\text{Total Price}} \times 100$ (e.g., 10% = $\frac{10}{100} \times 100$)

Price After Discount = $\text{Total Price} - \text{Discount}$ (e.g., \$90 = \$100 - \$10)

Price After Discount = $\text{Total Price} \times (1 - \text{Discount Percentage})$ (e.g., \$90 = \$100 \times (1 - 0.10))

Item	Price	Discount	Price After Discount
Apple	$1.00	0.10	$0.90
Banana	$2.00	0.10	$1.80
Orange	$3.00	0.10	$2.70
Apple	$1.00	0.10	$0.90
Banana	$2.00	0.10	$1.80
Orange	$3.00	0.10	$2.70
Total	$9.00	0.10	$8.10

As the number of items increases, it is often difficult to compute the total price after discounts. For example, if the total price is $100, and the discount is 10%, the total price after the discount is $90. The discount is applied to the total price, not to the price after the discount.

1. The total price is $100, and the discount is 10%. The total price after the discount is $90. The discount is applied to the total price, not to the price after the discount.
2. The total price is $100, and the discount is 10%. The total price after the discount is $90. The discount is applied to the total price, not to the price after the discount.
3. The total price is $100, and the discount is 10%. The total price after the discount is $90. The discount is applied to the total price, not to the price after the discount.
4. The total price is $100, and the discount is 10%. The total price after the discount is $90. The discount is applied to the total price, not to the price after the discount.
5. The total price is $100, and the discount is 10%. The total price after the discount is $90. The discount is applied to the total price, not to the price after the discount.
