NUMBER & CHARACTER

Integer
 The integer data type represents whole numbers, both positive and negative. It is the most common data type used in C++ programs. The range of values that can be stored in an integer depends on the compiler and the platform. The standard integer type is `int`.

Character
 The character data type represents a single character. It is used to store and manipulate individual characters, such as letters, digits, and symbols. The standard character type is `char`.

String
 A string is a sequence of characters. In C++, strings are represented as arrays of `char` characters. The standard string type is `std::string`.

Integer Literals
 Integer literals are used to represent whole numbers in a program. They can be written in decimal, octal, or hexadecimal notation. For example, `123` is a decimal integer literal, `0755` is an octal integer literal, and `0xA1B2` is a hexadecimal integer literal.

Character Literals
 Character literals are used to represent a single character in a program. They are enclosed in single quotes. For example, `'a'` is a character literal representing the lowercase letter 'a'. The character `\n` represents a newline character.

String Literals
 String literals are used to represent a sequence of characters in a program. They are enclosed in double quotes. For example, `"Hello, world!"` is a string literal representing the text "Hello, world!".

Integer Constants
 Integer constants are used to represent whole numbers that do not change during the execution of a program. They are written in the same notation as integer literals. For example, `123` is an integer constant.

Character Constants
 Character constants are used to represent a single character that does not change during the execution of a program. They are enclosed in single quotes. For example, `'a'` is a character constant.

String Constants
 String constants are used to represent a sequence of characters that does not change during the execution of a program. They are enclosed in double quotes. For example, `"Hello, world!"` is a string constant.

Character Array
 A character array is a collection of characters stored in memory. It is declared as an array of `char` elements. For example, `char arr[10];` declares a character array of size 10.

Integer Variable
 An integer variable is a variable that can store a whole number. It is declared using the `int` keyword. For example, `int x;` declares an integer variable named `x`.

Character Variable
 A character variable is a variable that can store a single character. It is declared using the `char` keyword. For example, `char c;` declares a character variable named `c`.

String Variable
 A string variable is a variable that can store a sequence of characters. It is declared using the `std::string` type. For example, `std::string s;` declares a string variable named `s`.
