

Plans for Reconstruction

After the Civil War, many Americans believed Reconstruction should be a process of difficulty in restoring the South to its former status. A plan for Reconstruction was drafted by a group of officials. These officials proposed a Reconstruction plan, including a Reconstruction Act. The plan called for the appointment of a Southern agent by the Reconstruction Act. The Reconstruction Act was passed by Congress in 1867. The Reconstruction Act was passed by Congress in 1867. The Reconstruction Act was passed by Congress in 1867.

The Reconstruction Amendments

Between 1865 and 1870, three amendments to the Constitution were ratified, which would become known as the Reconstruction Amendments. Numerically, they are the 13th, 14th, and 15th Amendments, which gave constitutional status to the equality of race to newly freed slaves. Much of the legislation that came after 1865 is designed to carry out the work of the Radical Republicans, who favored abolition and did not seek compromise or ending slavery. Despite Congressional support, there were many Southerners who were not in favor of these amendments, and they worked to increase the resistance that had begun against the Civil War.

The 13th Amendment passed in Congress on January 31, 1865, a few months before President Lincoln was assassinated. It was not formally ratified until December 6 of that year. The 14th Amendment is considered to be the one which formally ended slavery in the United States.

CRITICISMS & SOLUTIONS

Many critics believed that the Reconstruction plan was too lenient on the South. They argued that the South should be punished for its role in the Civil War. Some critics also argued that the Reconstruction plan was too slow and that it did not do enough to protect the rights of African Americans. In response to these criticisms, Congress passed the Reconstruction Act of 1867, which required the South to accept the Reconstruction plan as a condition for being readmitted to the Union.
