

INTRODUCTION TO ASPEN PLUS SIMULATION

What is Process Simulation/Analysis?

The purpose of process simulation is to model and predict the performance of a process. It involves the development of the process into the mathematical elements (e.g. units) and subsequent study of performance. The process identification is e.g. flowsheet, instrumentation, composition, process operation, equipment sizes, etc. It can be carried out using analysis techniques (flow simulation, steady state simulation) or fully integrated simulation and optimisation software (e.g. ASPEN Plus). In addition, process analysis may involve the use of experimental data to predict and validate performance. Therefore, in process simulation, we use given the process flowsheet and description and specified input process ranges (Fig. 1). The software then can ASPEN Plus. It is a comprehensive software which uses the underlying physical relationships (e.g., material and energy balances, thermodynamic properties, rate equations to predict process performance (e.g., stream properties, operating conditions, and equipment sizes).

Fig. 1. Process Simulation Problem

There are several advantages of computer aided simulation:

- Allows the designer to quickly test the performance of complex process alternatives and provide feedback to the process synthesis activities.
- Can be incorporated with process synthesis to finding optimum integrated design.
- Minimise experimental and scale-up efforts.
- Explains process flexibility and sensitivity by answering "what if" questions.
- Quantitatively evaluate the process and check design for process performance.

Expensive errors in conventional design involving use the existing model of computer aided simulation:

- Excessive complexity over the simplified RST simulation model.
- The conventional model generally as good as the design model given the simulation.
- But ASPEN simulation provides that the simulated model under physical process conditions give with the RST the ability to simulate various cases of the design of great value.
