Distribution of Insurance-Based Investment Products Pierpaolo Marano, Ioannis Rokas, 2019-03-27 The book addresses a topic at the intersection of two heavily regulated sectors insurance and investment services Until recently scholars and professionals have approached insurance and investment services as two separate categories in the financial services sector and as being governed by separate regulatory frameworks In practice however the boundaries were and are blurred a reality that regulators have begun to recognize and address in their more recent regulatory texts The first part of the book approaches the new standards applicable to investment products based on insurance insurance based investment products IBIPs These rules are harmonized across the EU The rationale behind this new definition is provided together with a description of these products limitations The analysis addresses the new rules and explores the legal regime and relevant standards applicable to IBIPs The organizational rules concerning the design and distribution of IBIPs are also examined and the book highlights e g how these rules are inspired by the principles of conduct In closing the ADR systems are analysed in order to ascertain whether or not they can offer an effective tool for settling disputes over these products In turn the second part focuses on the liability for distribution of IBIPs which ranks as one of the most conspicuous and relatively new legal phenomena but at the same time represents an exceptionally important field of civil liability in today s world Liability is still regulated at the national level Thus the four largest life insurance markets in the EU are considered along with the largest emerging market for life insurance The chapters on national laws also consider whether and if so how the new harmonized rules on IBIPs are being combined with those already in force in the jurisdictions considered The goal is to determine whether the new rules are likely to change the doctrine and case law approach to these products or whether the European legislators choices have no real impact on the protection of clients

The Influence of the Insurance Distribution Directive (IDD) on the German Insurance Market Philipp Haye, 2018 This thesis analyzes the effect of the Insurance Distribution Directive IDD on the German insurance market This EU directive was initiated to increase customer protection by creating a framework that better aligns the interest and incentives of consumers insurers and insurance intermediaries Especially in Germany the IDD was viewed as an impulse to move the insurance intermediation market from the currently dominant compensation based remuneration system towards a fee for advice system However the analysis shows that the result of the German implementation of the IDD is rather soft and will not lead to a major strengthening of the fee for advice system A thorough literature review and an analysis on the effects of stronger regulations in other EU member states prior to the introduction of the IDD lead to the conclusion that a fee for advice system is generally not superior to the compensation based system and therefore the decision of the German legislator to not considerably restrict insurance intermediaries with respect to their remuneration seems reasonable from the author s point of view
