

Feedback Mechanisms

How do organizations regulate complex systems through feedback mechanisms?

A feedback loop occurs when a process or system acts back upon itself, causing a change in the process. This can occur either directly or indirectly. For example, a company that produces a product may receive feedback from customers. This feedback can be used to improve the product, which in turn leads to a change in the company's reputation. This change in reputation can lead to a change in the company's sales, which in turn leads to a change in the company's profits. This is a simple example of a feedback loop. More complex feedback loops can be found in many other areas, such as in the economy, in the environment, and in the human body.

Model 1: Traditional Regulatory Feedback

1. What does your system automatically do? (Feedback loop) (Feedback)

2. What does your system do? (Feedback loop) (Feedback)

Intentional

Unintentional

3. What does your system do? (Feedback loop) (Feedback)
