

Frictions

When using two knot systems, before reaching the top strand, the active strand is cammed against the surface. This cammed position allows the strands to compress the surface.

These strands don't have an official name, but we call them "the strand that I don't see" or "the strand that I don't see" in "frictions".

Frictions rely on the rope's tendency to grip itself, which is why the rope can't move up or down. Frictions are used to hold the rope in place. Frictions work best when the rope is under tension. Frictions are used to hold the rope in place. Frictions are used to hold the rope in place.
