

Colour

Colour is often one of the most exciting components of a painting, but what exactly is it? Understanding the basic principles of colour theory helps you analyse how artists exploit and manipulate it to their work. They use colour together with composition, perspective, and light and shade to strengthen the impact of the artwork itself.

Mixing and comparing colours

The spectrum of light makes colours visible. Light from a source of different angles, either from the sun or from an artificial source, is made up of different colours. The range of wavelengths that our eyes can detect is called the visible spectrum; the shorter visible wavelengths appear as violet and the longest as red. Artists use pigments from powdered minerals that absorb some wavelengths and reflect others. Use of coloured fluorescent paints, for instance, in a painting can provide the means of reflecting light.

The colour wheel

Colour relationships are set out in the colour wheel, developed by Sir Isaac Newton in 1666. It shows the primary colours (red, yellow and blue) and the secondary colours (orange, green and purple) that can be made by mixing them. The wheel also shows the tertiary colours (red-orange, yellow-orange, yellow-green, green, blue-green and blue-violet) that can be made by mixing a primary colour with a secondary colour. The wheel is a useful tool for artists to use when they are choosing colours for their work. It can be used to help them choose colours that are complementary, analogous or triadic, and to help them choose colours that are warm or cool, and to help them choose colours that are light or dark.

Primary and secondary

More colour mixtures

Intensity

The intensity of a color is its brightness. It is measured on a scale from 0 (black) to 100 (white). The intensity of a color is affected by the amount of light that it reflects. The more light it reflects, the brighter it is. The intensity of a color is also affected by the amount of light that it absorbs. The more light it absorbs, the darker it is.

Tintlessness

Tintlessness is the absence of color. It is measured on a scale from 0 (black) to 100 (white). The tintlessness of a color is affected by the amount of light that it reflects. The more light it reflects, the more tintless it is. The tintlessness of a color is also affected by the amount of light that it absorbs. The more light it absorbs, the less tintless it is.
