6

The fuel cell converts chemical energy from a hydrocarbon fuel (such as hydrogen, butanol, and other fuels) directly into electrical energy through a complex process called electrocatalysis. In this process, hydrocarbons react with oxygen and water to produce and the energy released is used to drive a turbine generator. Hydrogen, O₂ and water are the main components of the fuel cell system. Expanding Your Knowledge

1. Hydrogen Fuel Cells: A Clean Energy Source

Hydrogen fuel cells have long been a subject of interest because of their potential to provide clean energy.

Hydrogen fuel cells are a type of electrochemical cell that convert chemical energy from hydrogen and oxygen into electrical energy. The reaction is as follows: $2H_2 + O_2 \rightarrow 2H_2O$. The energy released in this reaction is used to drive a turbine generator. Hydrogen fuel cells are a clean energy source because they produce only water as a byproduct. They are also a renewable energy source because hydrogen can be produced from water using renewable energy sources such as wind, solar, and hydro. Hydrogen fuel cells are a promising technology for power generation in a wide range of applications, from small-scale portable power to large-scale power plants. They are also a key component of a clean energy future because they can provide a reliable and sustainable source of power.
