

Colour

Colour is often one of the most exciting components of a painting, but what exactly is it? Understanding the basic principles of colour theory helps you analyse how artists exploit and manipulate it to their work. They use colour together with composition, perspective, and light and shade to strengthen the impact of the artwork itself.

Mixing and comparing colours

The spectrum of light makes colour visible. Light from a source of different angles, either pure and homogeneous or from a mixture of different colours. The range of wavelengths perceived can be related to the spectrum: the shorter the wavelength, the more violet and the longer the wavelength, the more red. The spectrum of visible light is divided into primary, secondary and tertiary colours. The colour in a painting can provide the evidence of which range.

The colour wheel

Colour relationships are defined on the colour wheel, which is divided into 120 degrees. The primary colours are red, yellow and blue. The secondary colours are green, cyan and magenta. The tertiary colours are orange, red-violet and blue-violet. The colour wheel is a useful tool for understanding the relationships between colours. It shows how colours are related to each other and how they can be mixed to create new shades. The wheel is divided into primary, secondary and tertiary colours. The primary colours are red, yellow and blue. The secondary colours are green, cyan and magenta. The tertiary colours are orange, red-violet and blue-violet.
