

Origin of the Earth

The Earth probably formed from material in the solar nebula—the cloud of gas and dust that led to the formation of the Sun. This material gradually grew into a larger and larger body that became a red-hot ball of rock and metal. Later the rocky crust formed, its surface cooling enough to allow the continents to appear. Even later the oceans arrived, as well as the tiny organisms that released oxygen into the atmosphere. Although much of this gas was initially consumed in chemical reactions, over time, it allowed the development of multicellular organisms and an explosion of life that took place at the start of the Paleozoic Era, 542 million years ago.

Continental Drift

The flow of the continents, which are part of tectonic plates that drift across the Earth's surface at the rate of a fingernail's growth, has taken place over 400 million years. Africa, Australia, and Antarctica were part of the supercontinent Gondwana. When tectonic plates are pushed together, they can push together and submerge one under the other, creating a rift basin. The rift basin deepens and can eventually fill with water, forming a sea that eventually becomes the Atlantic Ocean basin. When plates slide past one another, a transform fault can form. When plates slide toward one another, a subduction zone can form. When plates slide away from one another, a mid-ocean ridge can form. The plates are constantly moving, changing at the rate of centimeters.

1 400 MILLION YEARS AGO
The supercontinent Gondwana formed as continents merged together.

2 300 MILLION YEARS AGO
The plates had nearly split. Pangea, including two continents, formed in Gondwana and Laurasia.

3 200 MILLION YEARS AGO
Continents split, forming Africa and North America as the Atlantic Ocean basin formed.

Origin of the Earth

The Earth was formed 4.5 billion years ago from a cloud of dust and gas. In the beginning, it was a molten, scorching sphere made of iron, nickel, and silicate. As it cooled, the atmosphere began to form, and the continents began to rise as the Earth cooled further.

Tectonic Plates

The surface of the Earth is composed of tectonic plates. These are rigid upper plates, some of which are composed of both crust and upper mantle. The plates' boundaries are marked by major features, such as ridges, trenches, and transform faults.
