

Student Exploration: Balancing Chemical Equations

(This resource is intended for teachers.)

Essential Question: How do we balance chemical equations? What is the relationship between the number of atoms of each element on the reactant side and the number of atoms of each element on the product side?

Prerequisite Knowledge: Students should be able to write using chemical formulas.

1. A chemical equation is a symbolic representation of a chemical reaction. The reactants are on the left side of the equation, and the products are on the right side of the equation.
2. In a balanced chemical equation, the mass of the reactants is equal to the mass of the products. This is because matter is neither created nor destroyed in a chemical reaction.

Student Exploration

Read or listen to the following passage carefully. Then answer the questions that follow.

Introduction: In chemistry, the process of balancing chemical equations is a fundamental skill. It is a process that ensures that the number of atoms of each element is the same on both sides of the equation. This is because matter is neither created nor destroyed in a chemical reaction.

Example: Consider the following chemical equation:

1. Look at the coefficients (the numbers in front of the chemical formulas) in the equation. How do they relate to the number of atoms of each element on the reactant side and the product side? Do the numbers of atoms balance? Explain your answer.

Element	Reactants	Products
Hydrogen (H)	4	4
Oxygen (O)	2	2

2. If a chemical equation is not balanced, the number of atoms of each element on the reactant side is not equal to the number of atoms of each element on the product side.

Element	Reactants	Products
Hydrogen (H)	2	2
Oxygen (O)	1	1

Does this equation balance? If not, how would you balance it?

Introduction

Chemical equations are used to represent chemical reactions.
