CYCLE OF ABUSE

1. Tension Building
The abuser begins to act out, often with small incidents of verbal abuse, criticism, and blame. The victim feels increasingly nervous and on edge.

2. Incident
The abuser's anger escalates into a violent act, such as physical assault, sexual violence, or a severe verbal attack. The victim is often injured or traumatized.

3. Reconciliation
The abuser apologizes, promises to change, and shows remorse. They may offer gifts, flowers, or affection to win back the victim's trust.

4. Denial
The abuser denies the incident, blaming the victim for causing the abuse. They may minimize the severity of the incident or claim that it never happened.

EARLY

Being a domestic violence survivor means living in a household where there is fear, anger, and a constant sense of being on edge. The abuser's behavior is unpredictable and often escalates over time. This can lead to a cycle of abuse that is difficult to break.

NARCISSISM: HOOVERING

Hoovering is a term commonly associated with narcissists. It refers to the abuser's attempt to suck you back into the relationship after you have left. They use a variety of tactics to manipulate you and make you feel like you are still needed.

01 Love-bombing
Showing the person with affection, promises, or attention to rebuild the relationship.

02 Guilt Tripping
Creating a sense of responsibility or guilt to manipulate the person into returning.

03 False Promises
Claiming they've changed or will manage their behavior if given another chance.

Results of self-harm or extreme neediness
Trying to create an emotional urgency to make the other person feel needed.

POWER AND CONTROL

The abuser's primary goal is to gain power and control over the victim. This is often achieved through a variety of tactics, including isolation, gaslighting, and physical violence.
