

Evolution & Natural Selection

DOODLE NOTES

GENETIC Evolution

natural selection changes the range of traits in a population - there are 3 ways it can change. Let's look at a moth population that shows

An example of natural selection!

COOL! A population of light brown moths lives on a tree trunk. The hawk can't see them.

YUCK! A hawk catches a light brown moth. The hawk can't see the dark brown moths.

NOOOOOO! The light brown moths are more likely to get eaten. They are the best to survive.

A higher proportion of dark brown moths reproduce, passing on the beneficial trait.

Over time, the population has changed so that most of the moths are dark brown.

Evolution by natural selection

Describe the theory of natural selection and how this theory was first conceived (thought of).

An English naturalist named Charles Darwin went on a voyage around the world. He noticed that animals in similar environments had similar characteristics. For example, in the Galápagos islands, Darwin observed similar but non-identical species of finches on each island. He noticed that their beaks seemed to be adapted to their food source. After some time thinking and the work of other scientists, Darwin came up with the theory of natural selection.

Individuals with favorable traits survive and reproduce, passing on those traits to their offspring. Over time, the population becomes better adapted to its environment.

Individuals with unfavorable traits are less likely to survive and reproduce, so they are eventually eliminated.

GENE FLOW

What is it?

Gene flow is the movement of genes in or out of a population. It happens through movement of individuals or gametes. For example, the movement of pollen or seeds. This can bring new alleles into a population or change the frequency of existing alleles.

Example:

Water hyacinth (1877)

Population 1

Population 2

Water hyacinth is introduced to a new area. Individual 1 carries a beneficial allele.

Stabilizing Selection

Stabilizing selection favors the average phenotype and acts against the extreme phenotypes. For example, in a population of moths, the average color is brown. Moths that are too light or too dark are less likely to survive.
